Q: Why is there no translation interface to keyboard? The blog posts on StackExchange have many interesting posts, but one that caught my attention is the "Ask a question" page. When a user wants to write something (a question or an answer), he/she uses a keyboard. But why there is no translation interface to keyboard? We have buttons to move us to the previous and next question and also a "Compose your own question" button, but no button to translate the keyboard to English. If a user has a non-English character in his/her question, he/she needs to use Google Translator or some other tool (e.g., he/she has to type the English question, translate it to Chinese, then the user has to write in Chinese, and then English). That is the reason why it is better to use a keyboard. We could use some icon to move us to the previous and next question. Or we could add a keyboard translation interface, so that when a user wants to ask something, he/she will be able to type the question into it and the system could translate the keyboard to the user's preferred language. Thanks in advance. A: The beta theme is not translated to any of the languages.
