Its story comes as it describes the "wake-up call" delivered by the voters in the European elections last week. The number of people who turned out to vote for the Brexit party was about twice the number who voted for the Conservatives. The Daily Mirror calls the Brexit party's success "one of the most astonishing political turnarounds in modern political history". The paper says the Brexit party's leader, Nigel Farage, turned up at the count - something that was said to be unusual for the party. "He declared: 'You've turned this election round and I'm very proud of that'," the Mirror says. The paper reports that a 12.4% swing in the national vote saw Boris Johnson's party lose all of its MEPs in Scotland and Wales, as well as the East Midlands. The Independent believes the result shows that people believe Brexit is a "no-go zone" for the Conservatives. However, its lead story focuses on the Chancellor, Philip Hammond, who writes a pre-budget article for the paper, urging MPs to vote for a "jobs first Brexit". According to the newspaper, he "faces a humiliating defeat" in the Commons next week and its campaign, which would fund a "so-called People's Vote" on Brexit, is supported by the Brexit Party.
