The FIFA Personality of the Year Index, based on FIFA-Mandated Personality Tests of Real-Life Players, allows you to interpret the impact, personality traits and behaviours of a player in context to his career and performance. The FIFA Personality of the Year Index also includes a 'Journey' element, which gives you an in-depth insight into a player's career and gives you a clear understanding of how they have shaped themselves and their career along the way. The following are some of the key personality traits uncovered by the research: Agility Agility is developed with the high energy displayed by the player in possession during the match. The intensity and different phases of a match are all kept in mind while rating the player's agility. Variance in agility High performance A player with high performance is regarded to have a better ability to make critical decisions with very little time and space to execute the right decisions. On the other hand, they have full trust in their abilities and are highly disciplined to perform. High IQ These types of players are unafraid of setting objectives and are up for any challenge, whether at the Club or International level. Being smart enables them to adapt to changes and make the right decisions from moment to moment. Influences The player works under pressure in every aspect of life. They understand the fact that ultimately the success of their career depends on them, thus they put in their best efforts to succeed. Self-confidence Players with high self-confidence understand that they are always under pressure, so they ensure that in every stage of their career, they aim to do their best. Leadership Leadership is an integral part of the football journey for a player and is determined by the player's overall performance, ability to manage a player network and ability to understand the needs of the team. Analytic Analytic players have a high level of judgment and reasoning for every stage of a match. This helps them to develop a plan of action to achieve their goals. Motivation Players with the motivation to improve their game from day to day ensure that they consistently display high-intensity training for both their own development and the good of the team. High passion High-passion players use the tactics to achieve a victory with self-confidence. To them, a tactical advantage is more important than a moral advantage
