Photoshop has 8 years of continuous innovation under its belt. It's being improved at a rapid pace and, if anything, Photoshop is more powerful than ever. Let's find out more about Photoshop's various functions. Photoshop has many popular tools and functions, such as various tools to filter images, tools to give space to images, tools for text positioning, tools for free hand drawing and tools for changing color. However, in this article, we have to look at Photoshop's various fundamental functions.

1. Main editing functions Using the basic editing functions in Photoshop is key to creating professional-grade images. Let's take a look at the most popular editing functions.
  1. Adjustment: Operations that change image brightness, saturation, and colors Adobe Photoshop has many adjustment options to change the brightness and color of an image. (Note: Adobe recommends using the eyedropper to select a color. However, you can use a color picker or other method to select a color. You can find this tool in the "Color" option in the main toolbar.)
    - Brightness and brightness control are at the top of the list, but it also includes the following two functions, Fill Light Flood Light Levels: this control adjusts exposure Curves: this control adjusts the gray levels in an image Map: this function changes the brightness of the picture using a user-defined white point Hue: this control changes the color of the picture using a user-defined color point Contrast: this control changes the contrast of the picture (This increases or decreases the contrast of an image) Spot Removal: this function allows you to remove undesired objects from a picture, such as a tree branch, hair or shadow, Spot Healing: this function lets you change the content of a specific area on a picture, Adjust Layer: this function allows you to adjust the effect of a single layer or the entire picture
  2. Black & White: Functions to make an image look pure black & white You can create a black & white image with functions that let you control the color and contrast of a picture. It offers only two options, the following, Black & White Black & White (duotone)
  3. Levels: functions to adjust brightness & contrast of an image Using the Levels function, you can even adjust

Updated to 6:20 a.m. A two-vehicle crash at the intersection of Interstate 5 and North Hollywood Way killed a woman early Wednesday morning, authorities said. Los Angeles Fire Department officials said a female driver of one car suffered life-threatening injuries while another driver, a male, suffered minor injuries after crashing into her vehicle just before midnight. It was not immediately known whether the two were related. Fire officials said they treated both occupants of the vehicles for their injuries and transported them to a local hospital for further treatment. Officials described the conditions of the deceased as "non-life-threatening." LAFD officials said they determined the crash was triggered by the male driver exceeding the speed limit. The crash was in the southbound lanes of I-5 near North Hollywood Way. doug.smith@latimes.com Twitter:

@LADouglasSmithQ: Most Inefficient Way to run Similar Programs on Common Platform? I have a school project that I am working on that requires me to run programs for a few different types of task. The type of program runs are pretty similar, so I would love to make the same program run for each type of task I have. I want to reduce the amount of lines of code I am writing, but also want to avoid reinventing the wheel. Is there a way to improve my code to make it as efficient as possible? RunAll() is what I would be calling this. This function is going to be called by another class that reads in input from a serial interface and passes it to me public static void RunAll() { string[] args = new string[] { "thepath\\input1.txt", "thepath\\input2.txt", "thepath\\input3.txt" }; try { Process[] process = Process.GetProcessesByName("ProcessToTest"); foreach (Process process in process) { string[] argList = process.StartInfo.Arguments.ToArray(); Console.WriteLine(process.StartInfo.FileName + " " + process.StartInfo.Arguments);

New Zealand's line-up is being given what could be a make-or-break audition as it prepares to face Australia in a five-match Rugby Championship series. Photo: PHOTOSPORT New Zealand coach Steve Hansen has already confirmed that the All Blacks have a combined total of 14 players in their 35-man squad. That includes five players who play outside of New Zealand: wing Beauden Barrett, fly-half Aaron Smith, loose forward Sam Whitelock, prop Owen Franks and lock Brodie Retallick. But Saturday's final test against the All Blacks is expected to come down to the final selection for the series finale. The side that finishes top of the southern hemisphere ladder will be crowned world champions, while the losing side could lose a player from its 30-man squad for the World Cup. Given the All Blacks are a week off and the Championship series is just three weeks away, Hansen has declared that they have a week to play as normal. "People will say it's a bit late... to evaluate one of the players that you're playing but I'll put that to you in terms of playing rugby," he said. "We've got the week off and we've got the Test against South Africa. "People will be quick to say that's a terrible time to do that but we've got the week off and it's only three weeks until the final Test... That's not to say it's always right to play a player but I'd certainly make a call on whether that was the case." The All Blacks squad features some of New Zealand's biggest stars and is headlined by Barrett, England's World Cup-winning captain Chris Robshaw and Argentina's Ricardo Brown. Only two of the All Blacks' front-rowers from last year's Rugby Championship - Dan Carter and Richie McCaw - are in contention to be considered for selection. New Zealand squad: 1. Richie McCaw (Hurricanes), 2. Sam Whitelock (Crusaders), 3. Charlie Faumuina (Hurricanes), 4. Kieran Read (Watersiders), 5. Liam Messam (Bulls), 6. Conrad Smith (Crusaders), 7. Sonny Bill Williams (Crusaders), 8. Anthony Watson (Blues), 9. Dane Coles (Crusaders), 10. Aaron Smith (Chiefs), 11. Beauden Barrett (Reds),
