With its population of 10 million, it is the ninth most populous country of Europe with many outstanding natural and architectural beauties around. From the outset, the most outstanding feature is the typical structure of the country which is a mixture of old and new. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a projection exposure apparatus and method for transferring a pattern of a reticle to a sensitive substrate (e.g., semiconductor wafer, glass plate, or the like), and more particularly, to a projection exposure apparatus and method in which high throughput is secured with a simple mechanism. 2. Description of the Related Art A projection exposure apparatus for transferring an image of a pattern of a reticle to a sensitive substrate (e.g., semiconductor wafer or glass plate) used for the manufacture of semiconductor devices and liquid crystal display devices has been extensively applied. In a conventional projection exposure apparatus, the reticle is scanned while a predetermined amount of light is irradiated to the reticle, and the light passing through the reticle is reduced to form an image of the reticle on a sensitive substrate. When the conventional projection exposure apparatus transfers the image of the reticle to a sensitive substrate, the sensitive substrate is placed on a mask table. The mask table is displaced by a predetermined amount along the optical axis of a projection lens by a scanning drive mechanism. Then, a light source provided above the mask table radiates light to the reticle. In recent years, a projection exposure apparatus known as a scanning exposure apparatus has been developed. In the scanning exposure apparatus, the mask table is moved along the optical axis of the projection lens, thereby transferring the pattern of the reticle to the sensitive substrate. The scanning exposure apparatus requires a scanning drive mechanism
