Photoshop isn't the only good image-editing program. Other examples are Adobe Photoshop Elements, GIMP, and Pixlr (www.pixlr.com). Taking photos with your smartphone Smartphones have become the new camera. They don't replace a dedicated SLR camera, but they take pictures better than SLRs ever did, and the trend is moving toward the average consumer taking more pictures with their smartphones than ever before. Most smartphones can shoot high-definition video, and many even have some kind of long-range shooting capability. Your smartphone can be the answer to your memory-card woes — and then some. Getting up close and personal Sometimes you're looking for something more than a wide angle. You may want a close-up photo of your child, a pet, a flower, or whatever you want to show close up. Take a telephoto lens with you to your next photo shoot, or take several shots at different focal lengths to capture a wide panorama. Two popular close-up lenses are the Lytro light sheet and Lytro glass lens, both of which create a whole new visual experience. You can get these cameras used, but you can also get them new for less than $500, although you can get them new with various add-on accessories. Paying with your phone Now that credit cards are such a staple of our daily lives, you may find yourself stuck with a credit card issued by some third-party without an easy way to use it. If you're working for a company that's not using a corporate card with the company's name on it, you may find that managing your expenses with a personal card is more of a hassle than it's worth. Now, you can create a prepaid card with your smartphone and pay for your purchases with the credit from the prepaid card, thus avoiding the expense and risk of losing your personal card. For this to work, you must install an app such as Mint or Quicken on your smartphone. The catch to using your phone as a prepaid card is that you must have a data connection in order to access your accounts. Also, even though many prepaid cards now let you pay with your phone, the company still needs to receive your payment. So you may lose out on another benefit of having your account in your name. How to adjust exposure Shooting in difficult lighting is more common than you may think. Most DSLRs have a

The present invention relates to a carding machine which has a traveling and driving mechanism disposed on a working frame, together with a bunching mechanism and bunching shaft, a plurality of carding drums mounted to the working frame, a plurality of cylinders, and a plurality of carding belts, and a method of the carding machine. Generally, in the process of processing vegetative material such as fiber material and pulp material, a carding machine which forms a sliver or the like from the processed material has a mechanism which is capable of independently performing a bunching step, a false-twist step, a crimping step, and a curving step, and the bunching step, false-twist step, and crimping step are effected after the bunching step. FIG. 2 is a schematic view illustrating an arrangement of a conventional carding machine, FIG. 3 is an explanatory view illustrating a bunching mechanism of the carding machine, and FIG. 4 is a front view illustrating the arrangement of the bunching mechanism. In FIG. 2, reference numeral 1 denotes a working frame; 2 denotes a bunching shaft; 3 denotes a bunching mechanism having a plural of elements, such as a bunching duct 3a, a bunching roller 3b, a bunching post 3c, a bunching grid 3d, a bunching hopper 3e, a bunching suction pipe 3f, and the like, which are arranged so that they can be moved freely, and which are pivotally supported on the working frame 1; 4 denotes a bunching cylinder which is driven rotationally by a motor (not illustrated); 5 denotes a bunching shaft supported by a plurality of bearings, 6 denotes a sliver guide plate formed of a metal material, which is installed at an end of the working frame 1; 7 denotes a sliver guide plate constituted of a polymer material, which is installed at an end of the working frame 1; 8 denotes a finish roller rotatable by means of a motor (not illustrated), which is disposed at an end of the working frame 1, by means of which both end portions of the sliver guide plate 7 and of the sliver guide plate 6 are supported, and which is provided with a metal material, or a metal material with rubber pressed onto the metal material; 9 denotes a belt-crimping roller which is integrally formed with the sliver guide plate 6; 10 denotes a sliver guide rod installed at an end of the working frame
