“The FIFA World Cup is one of the biggest and most meaningful sporting events on the planet,” said Alex Young, Executive Vice President of Marketing, FIFA. “FIFA 22 will be the premier football game as we build up to the tournament. Our goal was to marry a sense of realism with the importance of football and we believe that we have made a meaningful step in delivering a football game that fans of all skill levels will enjoy.”

Improved Player Instincts and Dribbling Players with advanced dribbling skills can perform better shots or shots from longer range. Players will attempt more shots per game and will have the opportunity to shoot in more crowded areas. While the team will prioritize the development of offensive players, FIFA Ultimate Team will be developed with defensive skills in mind. Improved Hit Physics Players will now feel more impact from hard fouls, such as tackles or sliding tackles. Players will receive better feedback when heading the ball or falling over. Players will feel more power in headers and will be able to head the ball at greater heights. Improved Sliding If a player attempts a sliding tackle, the first player to make contact with the ball has the best chance of winning. Contact with the ball will feel more realistic, as players can now slide with the ball. Improved Pass Accuracy Players will now retain a ball that has been thrown to them, making it harder for opponents to intercept. Players will also be able to toss the ball to their teammates more accurately. Players will also adjust passes to take into account the trajectory of the ball, making it easier for teammates to receive the ball at the right time. Improved Artificial Intelligence AI teams will now make defensive decisions based on real-world data. Players will still be able to play through complex situations, but teams that are switching gears and chasing a game-changing goal will be more unpredictable. Improved Goalkeepers Goalkeepers’ reactions to attacks will now be more reactive and balanced. Goalkeepers will now be more prepared for a player who leaps or rolls at them. Improved Players Players will react to pressure more consistently. Players with greater pace will be able to accelerate more aggressively. Players will be able to recover their position at the top of the list of licensed players, making their first touch and heading options more reactive.
