With the release of Photoshop Elements 2013, the photo editing industry once again shook up the market. Compared to its predecessor Elements 2011, the latest version of Photoshop Elements can be described as a facelift. Almost every button has been replaced with a corresponding crop tool. Like its predecessor, the newest version of Photoshop Elements is a complete and innovative program that offers digital photo editing and retouching functions. Adobe Photoshop Elements. One of the first things that beginners notice is the change in the toolbar. Gone are the buttons that previously enabled the automatic enhancement functions and the add-on filters, replaced by a crop tool (similar to those used in the above toolbar), as well as several other features that make photo editing easier. It's all part of Adobe's embrace of its newly released Elements 2013. In response to the popularity of social media, and the desire of users to share online, Adobe has introduced a photo-editing experience that is centered around the unique features of new and innovative tools like the Content-Aware Move. Another highlight of the new program is the new Content-Aware Fill tool, which blends together the colors of a photo to replace fading or faded features in the image. Elements 2013 is the first in a series of new releases that will be provided as updates for existing elements programs. It can be used with both the Elements 2011 program and the Elements 2009 program. The new version of Elements is an interactive experience compared to its predecessor. It contains both a basic version of the program for amateur users and a more advanced version for advanced users. Pricing At the time of this writing, the basic Elements 2013 package can be purchased through Amazon for $24.99. It includes a year subscription for both the Elements 2013 program and the Adobe Creative Cloud software suite. Adobe Elements 2012. Versions of Elements 2013 In addition to the bundle program, Elements 2013 is also available in a variety of stand-alone versions: Elements 2013 for Mac. Elements 2013 for Windows. Elements 2013 for iPad. Pricing for stand-alone versions is available by searching through the Adobe site or through the Amazon application program for each platform. Features Elements 2013 for Mac There are two ways to configure Elements for Mac: Mac OS Catalina or OS X 10.10 Sierra. It also includes the newer Adobe cloud and

The case of Jeff Gordon, the four-time NASCAR champion and former world champion, seemed like a slam dunk. Perhaps "slam dunk" is too strong. But few who believe as I do that Jeff Gordon is the greatest driver of all time would have given a fig for the outcome of the Gordon v. Penske case (Gordon v. Penske Motorsports Group, pending in the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Ohio) until recently. With the release of the transcript of the June 20 hearing in the case, it appears that Penske's former attorney may have done more than his brief would have you believe. If the court accepts his statements, it could have the effect of letting Gordon re-enter the championship race without the sanction of a rule requiring drivers to run the complete Daytona 500. The transcript, which was filed with the court by our good friend, Foyt lawyer Roger Penske, has been online for at least five days, but I had not seen it until just a few minutes ago. Here it is. Three points of note: • It's the transcript of a hearing, not the transcript of a trial, so by definition the courtroom is off-limits. Judge Todd Campbell, I would think, followed this protocol as the transcript is not public. On the other hand, we're talking about the Penske-Gordon feud here, which was a public feud for the public to see, so Penske may not have thought the rule applied. • As Penske's lawyer says, the transcript is not public. And it says that there are other transcripts, presumably of the trial that is pending, that have been submitted. How then can the transcript be public? Will they become public? If so, how will they be made public? • Roger Penske may or may not be a saint. But he is a lawyer who is very much into the process. If his lawyer is trying to help Gordon win an appeal by telling lies, then we all owe him a couple of inches of rope. There is a tendency among lawyers to blame everyone else when their case goes south. This is just the way it is. And here's the transcript, to give you an idea of the context. Transcript MR. ROCKWELL: It's my understanding and the Court will tell me to the contrary if I'm wrong, that there is going to be an appeal in this case. We understand that

Q: Using a spline curve to make a design I am wondering how the spline curve can be used as well to make a design for example: I would like to know if the spline curve can be used to make a design like what is shown in the example? A: It's hard to visualize without a wireframe, but here's what I think is happening: The top half of the red rectangle is a spline curve going along the left edge of the red rectangle. It is parallel to the x axis. The bottom half of the red rectangle is a spline curve going along the top edge of the red rectangle. It is parallel to the y axis. The curves on the top and bottom are offset to make the top edge like a knife edge and the bottom edge like an eggbeater. The green lines make a tessellation pattern, and I'm not sure if it's important that they are straight or curved. This whole design can be made out of two spline curves. If you want to make the right edge of the red rectangle fall off first instead of the left edge, you can use the option "tension" to increase or decrease the width of the curves. You can create the green lines with the add curve or add spline tools. Q: Choosing lightbulbs to suit the environment I have a (home)room that I would like to illuminate. I do not want any bulbs to be visible outside this room, so in this case the fluorescent bulb, which is a hotplate, is my only option. The space where I would like to install the light is not too large and I'm looking for a small fixture which would not use a huge amount of space. All I need is a light (external or otherwise) for a 15m$ connection. I've found a few lamps on e-bay, but they are not cheap. Which lamp is best suited for this application? A: You could consider a standard mirror lamp from Ikea. A: The E27s are probably the best. They're a good size and cheap. If you only need 15 metres then you can probably get away with 1 x E26. If you can get one with the low level then you can almost double it with a reflector to E30. If you get fancy you
