It is a significant upgrade to FIFA, the last version of the game to include player motion capture, and the first version of the game since FIFA 2011 to offer full-on game play with player motion-capture. From the FIFA team, we spoke about the challenges of working with player motion capture, what they hope fans will gain from watching the motion-capture matches, and how these matches will help the development of the game. How the FIFA 22 Player Motion Capture System Came to Be EA's first attempt at motion-capture for FIFA was the EA Sports Lab motion-capture suits, which were used to capture the motion of 12 of the most popular players on the pitch for FIFA 11. "We weren't very happy with that," said Lamar Johnson, Creative Director of FIFA. "We didn't think it looked good. We didn't think it was natural. But the best part is that the player we saw walking around outside the studio, we thought it would be a great fit for the game. "When we started making those suits, we thought we would have enough to work with. Then we were dealing with the issues that come from having so many people inside the suit. We had too many movements. We had so many layers of clothing. We had to do so much work to try to bring some of that natural human movement to the sports games." They then decided to move to an isolated player motion-capture system, where they tested different players for three seasons. "We had a lot of requests from our fans to see the game being played in real time. Then we'd have an international tournament, and we'd go into the qualifying rounds, and we'd have to wait weeks and weeks to see the videos. It was a lot of work trying to synchronize that data." The final version of the player motion-capture system used for FIFA 22 allows for an accurate and responsive player, but also reduces the amount of wear and tear on the player's suit. "The timing was absolutely crucial for us," said Johnson. "We had an eleven year-old working with us on this, along with [EA Advanced Technologies] studio manager Jeff Pompowski and our motion capture team. And [1-on-1 Madden NFL 20 Pro-Am senior producer] Seth Frischling, who was overseeing the motion capture. We really had

EA SPORTS FIFA 22 enables players to step into the shoes of footballers and take on the game's opposition as they progress through the game modes. From the very first tackle, players can easily transition into a football game-style experience with their favorite team or player thanks to a new Play the Game button. Once in game, every nuance and detail of the real-world sport is brought to the digital game-world in a representation that is authentic, detailed, and spectacular. With a true physics engine that eliminates the artificial weight and size of FIFA players, a more realistic take on player control, and updated career mode, FIFA 22 is designed to feel, play, and look like the real thing. EA SPORTS FIFA 22 goes beyond the rule book to really bring the action to life. A brand-new deflection and shot mechanic gives players more control when completing free kicks and penalties. Players can play while passing to their team-mates, drift off their defender, and more, all while creating a wonderful new layer of unpredictability to the game. EA SPORTS FIFA 22, the most authentic football simulation in the franchise's history. Play the way you know football is played.
