The composition of the urinary steroid metabolites was examined in term and pregnant near term women to determine if the urinary steroid profiles of these groups could be differentiated. Furthermore, the role of the 3 alpha-hydroxysteroid dehydrogenase (3 alpha-HSDH) in metabolizing androgens was assessed by studying its changes during pregnancy. Differences in steroid profiles were observed in urine from subjects in the pregnant group as compared to term women in the group. The maximum level of urinary 17 alpha-hydroxyprogesterone was reached in pregnant women at about 36 weeks gestation. The maximum level of urinary androsterone, an index of adrenal androgenic activity, was measured in the pregnant subjects at about 26 weeks gestation. Two women in the pregnant group had a marked increase in 3 alpha-HSDH activity at some time during their pregnancy but only one of them did so during the final trimester.package schema2 import ("context" "github.com/docker/distribution/manifest" "github.com/docker/distribution/manifest/schema1"
